A STEPPE TOO FAR?

A WIN FOR THE SIDE OF FREEDOM IN STEPPE LANDS - WHAT WAS THE PRIZE?

As the allied nations triumph with a huge (narrow), honourable (for some), decisive (still narrow) victory in Steppe Lands, we at the Patriot wonder what was actually gained? Dashing alchemists did find a cure to a dreadful, shocking disease from the east. Legendary general Marcus Khan's tale hit a small snag (keep reading). Evil fae and their white elf troops were killed in great numbers. Finding that the Well of Night and Day was safest left locked up so no one could use it may have felt like a surprisingly damp fart, for some?

Still, who are we to say that heroic allied victories such as these ones aren't quite big enough? Peace in time for the harvest, please!

DEAD – Marcus Khan!

House Inducu's general lies slain in the Steppe Lands, cut down by the allied nations. We at the Patriot hear his corpse was grossly mistreated. We still won but hoped for better.

Greatest still-living general poll: our Kings Beaumont or Leofric, or Teutonia's Caesar?

Gethan – news update!

In a shock turn of events, serial evildoer Gethan does terrible evil again!

We at the Patriot offer our deepest condolences for the lives lost as a number of Albion heroes are carried to our Warhost's baggage train for honourable burial. Albion's resolve grows further. Faltering: we won't do it!

Fighting evil on many fronts and all at the same time, the warhost of Albion will catch you, you maggot dripping, pus loving sore in the ruin of a dead pig's arse.

DEIRA – King Beaumont Lives

Dramatic excitement and interest (only by professional mourners and traitors) in the brief and rapid illness of King Beaumont of Deira is now over. After going without public appearance for several weeks the King is now seen regularly again. We at the Patriot suppose that every Lions hero, especially Albion's very own General, needs a holiday now and then, especially to get over a small sniffle after so much winning.

SIR ADEMAR THE VERY DEAD - STILL WALKING

Volunteer wanted for death knight defeating. Previous experience useful.
