AMAZING ATTAINTMENT ALIGHTS ALBION

With victory, at great cost, in Oxford and a bright year ahead, Albion's fields will soon be filled with new calves. The people must be fed!

Essex's fishing fleets are out in force to help supply their fellows up and down the coasts of Albion. Keep your oilskins ship-shape in these tough climes, goodfolk! Thank you for what you do for us all. The Patriot knows it's the little folk as well as the great that shape the Ten Kingdoms.

Whilst the important duties of the country continue, the Hand, Champion and People's Queen work for ongoing stability and new plans.

Evil-doer at large!

Unlike his prick, the Patriot assumes.

“Great villain” Gethan Gaharis still wants the throne. The Patriot is tired of reporting on it, as he's such a sad, bitter person. Still, he'll soon be gone!

King Cornelius of Wessex: a profile

Brave hero of Albion, King Cornelius has risen far. But at what cost? The sad, ever-soldier, longing for war. This is what he has sacrificed for Albion. We at the Patriot pray that he rests his tiredness after his support of the valiant defenders of Oxford, also aided by soldiers of Essex and Anglia, last year.

Marketable bachelor: King Quentyn

With one saucy society wedding before Midwinter, can we expect another in the new year? Every great leader must have their legacy, so King Quentyn should be looking to get his leg over, for Albion! Who'll be the lucky lady?

Solkar's Corner: what punishment is best?

Gethan Gaharis is an enemy of Albion and should be tried properly, polite society might say. The Patriot would be concerned if too many lotteries selling tickets to “shit on Gethan's traitorous grave” were to be setup.
